

'The eurozone crisis has abated but the structural problems which gave rise to it persist. Using case studies of Greece, Ireland, Portugal and Spain this book makes a major contribution to our understanding of why the crisis was so devastating for economies on the periphery, and what needs to change to avoid a repetition.'

—Andrew Gamble, University of Sheffield, UK

'This is a rich, informative and analytically sharp volume on the politics of economic crisis and austerity in the Eurozone periphery. It will rightly take its place amongst the key volumes on the Euro-crisis. Its vivid insights make it essential reading for all scholars and students of European political economy and the contemporary European Union.'

—Ben Rosamond, University of Copenhagen, Denmark

This book investigates the causes and consequences of crisis in four countries of the Eurozone periphery – Greece, Spain, Portugal and Ireland. The contributions to this volume are provided by country-specific experts and are organised into two themed subsections: the first analyses the economic dynamics at play in relation to each state, whilst the second considers their respective political situations. The work debates what made these states particularly susceptible to crisis, the response to the crisis and its resultant effects, as well as the manifestation of resistance to austerity. In doing so, Parker and Tsarouhas consider the implications of continued fragilities in the Eurozone both for these countries and for European integration more generally.

Owen Parker is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Politics and Associate Fellow of the Sheffield Political Economy Research Institute (SPERI), both at the University of Sheffield, UK. He has written widely on International Relations and European politics, is co-author of the prominent textbook Politics in the European Union, and has previously worked for the European Commission.

Dimitris Tsarouhas is Associate Professor in the Department of International Relations at Bilkent University, Turkey and a Scientific Council Member of the Foundation for European Progressive Studies (FEPS) in Brussels. A former Jean Monnet Chair in European Politics, Tsarouhas has published extensively on European politics, public policy, and Greek-Turkish relations.
