Filmic and Media Narratives of the Crisis: Contemporary Representations

Following the 2015 Thessaloniki Works on the Narratives of Crisis (concerning the media narratives in general on the economic crisis and its enormous consequences especially for the European South, <https://narrativesofcrisis.webnode.gr/>), Filmic and Media Narratives of the Crisis: Contemporary Representations deepens the reflection of the contemporary representations on two special axes: the filmic narratives and the mass and social media narratives.

In this frame, the EURCECOM (Centre of Studies on the European Communication), the Master Communication, Media and Cultural Management of Panteion University, the PHILÉPOL (Centre de Philosophie, d'épistémologie et de Politique) of the University Paris Descartes, Sorbonne Paris Cité, the University of Haute Alsace (Mulhouse), the Cyprus University of Technology, the ISA-RC14, the AISLF-RC38, the University Mohammed V of Rabat, the University El Manar of Tunis, the National Center for Social Research and the French Institute of Greece, organize, on November 7th and 8th 2019, the international conference on: Filmic and Media Narratives of the Crisis: Contemporary Representations at the French Institute of Greece, in Athens.

Societies, are unable to surpass the “representation”. Cinema represents the narrative language of the contemporary world since the 20th century, having imposed its own communicational codes; it remains a prime mode of narration included in mass and social media essentially because the “image” (and the “screen”) are abstractive (as far as it concerns ideas and meanings) and at the same time concentrated (as far as it concerns the various descriptions). The “image” is the main vector of the contemporary storytelling. It is imposed at every level of communication surpassing the political, cultural and social frontiers being for this reason of an immense importance for the analysis of contemporaneity.

The crisis narrated by the cinema and the media-stories (fictional and “informative”) is an ideal topic reflecting thoughts, doubts, and fears of the contemporary society. Beginning with the cinema (its allegories and transcriptions of the social and political actions) and continuing with any media narration of the contemporary social issues (the crisis being a major one) this conference focuses on the research of the contemporary narratives of the media especially (but not exclusively) in the Mediterranean area, which is an exemplary region because of the problems related to identities, religions, frontiers, divisions and all kinds of social crises, thus allowing research, based on the analysis of representations, to “capture” the dominant myths sustaining the contemporary everyday life all over the world.

The conference venue, the French Institute of Greece in Athens is symbolical of our approach of cultures and of “otherness”. What can the critical sociological analysis offer to the understanding of reality which can no more be approached by the usual sociological terms? How the existing terms could be redefined according to the changing societies expressed by old symbols?
